

Unix Porting Project Subscription

See <http://www.chocky.org/unix/> for full details.

About

The Unix Porting Project takes advantage of the many thousands of programs available on Unix systems, to improve the software that exists on RISC OS. You say what programs you would like to see converted, and the project will attempt to convert them. There's no programming on your part. Your subscription also pays for support of using these programs (and of the many dozens that have already been converted). It also helps further development of RISC OS in many areas.

Although a great many Unix programs are command line based - a very considerable number (thousands) are graphical in nature, and would be excellent additions to the RISC OS desktop. Among these are web browsers, in which the project takes a particular interest. If you wish to take out an "extended subscription" you can provide extra support for development in this area. There are also a many games which can be easily converted, some of which have already be ported as part of the project.

The project also makes CDs available at 10ukp each, as the programs can be quite large to download. On the CD is the entire contents of the website (currently, around 70 programs). In addition, it also contains the current release of GCC, an experimental 32-bit version of GCC and 32-bit DeskLib (a Wimp programming library). The total contents of the CD is around 130MB.
